Books as Art Forms

This past Christmas, my partner gifted me a rare and beautiful book titled The Book: The Ultimate Guide to Rebuilding a Civilization. It was created by a team of researchers, authors, and illustrators who claim to have spent "more than 5000 hours painstakingly bringing the best in human innovation into one jaw-dropping hardcover book." I have only perused The Book a little, but I could immediately tell that a lot of time and effort went into creating it.

Though surely useful in the event of societal collapse, this book contains a wealth of knowledge. Combined with the stunning illustrations that are modern yet reminiscent of illustrations and diagrams from late Renaissance texts, The Book is itself a piece of art. This has made me reflect on the intersection of literature and design. Books themselves, regardless of what is written within their pages, can be a form of artistic expression.

Perhaps we should reconsider the adage, "Never judge a book by its cover." Its meaning is well-intended. Some of the greatest stories lay between the plainest of covers. Sometimes a fancy cover will distract a reader from a book with very little depth. However, one can still appreciate the artistry that has gone into the creation of a book. Consider not only the front and back covers, but also the paper used. Is it glossy or rough? Is it thin or thick? What types of fonts were used? Remember that someone made a conscious choice to use this font over all the others. How is the book bound? What materials are the covers made of? After the story is written, but before you can hold a book in your hands, so many other decisions have to be made. A leather-bound, hard cover book, printed on high quality paper can easily be perceived and, in our minds, be elevated to the level of a fine art object. So too can a trade paperback that you pick up at a corner store, pharmacy or the library, so long as you have a personal connection to it.

My recommendation is that if you have a beautiful book, put it on display. That way, it can be appreciated by more than just the reader. Even if it is a tattered -up old paperback that you have read a dozen times. Do it because it is beautiful to you.

Here is a list of artful editions that can be borrowed from the library:

- Clyde Fans by Seth
- The Monk of Mokha by Dave Eggers
- In the Heights: Finding Home by Lin-Manuel Miranda, Quira Algeria Hudes, and Jeremy McCarter
- Geddy Lee's Big Beautiful Books of Bass by Geddy Lee
- Ghost Brothers of Darkland County by John Mellencamp
- Where They Purr by Paul Barbera
- The Globe Illustrated
- Shakespeare: The Complete Works Annotated
- Wanderlust: A Traveler's Guide to the Globe
- Something Special by Iris Murdoch
- Sea Prayer by Khaled Hosseini
- The Pickwick Papers by Charles Dickens
- The Familiar (Volumes 1-3) by Mark Z. Danielewski
- The Complete Novels of Jane Austen by Jane Austen

Newsletter of the Friends of the Sault Ste. Marie Public Library

The Friends of the Sault Ste. Marie Public Library would like to wish all their customers, donors and volunteers a very Happy New Year! We have had an extremely successful year in both revenue for the library and in our community outreach. Over $1400 was raised this year by selling books online through Amazon. Sadly, our store is currently "on vacation" until the postal strike is over.

The Friends of the Library will hold their AGM Monday, February 3, 2025 at 7:00 p.m. This is an election year (3 year terms) and we will vote on the following executive positions: President, Vice-President, Secretary and Treasurer. If you are interested in taking on a very rewarding volunteer position, please drop by the Bookstore and let us know.

Volunteering Makes A Difference!

Our History

Winter fun and sports are something that Northern Ontario has always been known for and Sault Ste. Marie is no exception. Out of all the winter activities, skiing is probably one of the most enjoyed winter sports for the people in Sault Ste. Marie and area.

Perhaps the best-known ski resort in Algoma is Searchmont, located in the community of Searchmont, Ontario. The community was named after T.C. Search who was a Treasurer for the Consolidated Lake Superior Company. Founded in the 1950s, the ski resort boasted 18 downhill slopes, which would later be increased to 21. One of these slopes named the High Plateau, has a 700-foot vertical. This particular slope is one of the highest in the mid-west. A quad lift capable of carrying 2,000 skiers per hour was eventually added.

Over the years the resort has changed ownership many times and has experienced the threat of permanent closure at times.

In 1985, local hotelier and businessman, J.J. Hilsinger formed a group of local investors and with their $15 million investment, an expansion plan for the area was developed, which saved the Searchmont Ski Resort from bankruptcy. Hilsinger wanted to promote tourism and recreation, but he also wanted to protect and preserve the natural environment of the area so that everyone could enjoy it.

In Heather Ingram's book, Views of the Sault, J.J. Hilsinger is quoted as referring to the resort as, "Searchmont is the Rocky Mountains of the mid-west".

Although Sault Ste. Marie usually receives a lot of snow during the winter season, sometimes it is still not enough, and more snow may be needed. Using high-pressure snowmaking machines about 90 per cent of Searchmont's land can be covered with man-made snow. This same system was designed by the professionals that were in charge of snowmaking at the 1988 winter Olympics. Snowmaking ensures that visitors can enjoy skiing regardless of how much snow the season brings.

Over the years, Searchmont has offered more than just skiing, in the summer season people can enjoy off-road cycling, canoeing, kayaking and mountain biking. Perhaps the most unusual summer program was one that began in 1992 with circus workshops.

With each new owner, the property underwent improvements and changes. On Nov. 1, 2018, the ownership of the resort changed when Wisconsin Resort Inc. purchased Searchmont for $2 million. One of the first changes planned was investing $750,000 in new snowmaking equipment. This investment would increase Searchmont's snowmaking ability from 1,000 gallons per minute with 20 guns to 5,000 – 6,000 gallons per minute using up to 100 guns.

In addition to the slopes, Searchmont boasts both Villas and Chalets for overnight accommodation. These accommodations are located at the base of the main slope and provide a picturesque view of the mountains and surrounding landscape.

Searchmont has had its share of loyal and legendary supporters - one of them being John Shuckkewich, who earned that status for his loyalty to skiing at Searchmont. This senior citizen enjoyed the slopes almost daily for a number of winter seasons. The minutes of the Searchmont records actually documented one 14-day absence when he was vacationing with his wife in Cuba in the early 1990s as a notable exception to this schedule.

Herbert Lederer and others were instrumental in ensuring that the ski hill was established and continued to grow and develop. Another character was Searchmont's very own mascot, Searchmont the St. Bernard, who wore a rescue barrel around his neck and would roam the grounds greeting visitors.

Since the 1950s, Searchmont has provided the community with both winter and summer activities and we hope that the residents of the area, as well as visitors, will continue to be able to enjoy this wonderful and picturesque corner of Algoma for many years to come!
